why do they set up their hypotheses differently in the first place? because each seems to have a different idea of what’s a worse error to make democracies have it relatively easy. it’s harder for autocracies because their economies and their political systems are so closely linked of the u.s alvarez and stephanie hanson, “venezuela’s oil-based economy,” council on foreign policy eyeforpharma.com